

Cynthia Enloe, Research Professor in the Department of International Development, Community, and Environment and Women's Studies at Clark University gets introduced prior to her keynote speech at the Gender and States of Emergency Conference. She was co-sponsored by the Mershon Center for International Security Studies and was director, Rick Herrmann's first political science professor during his time at school.

Cynthia Enloe spoke on Friday, April 22, 2011 at the Blackwell Auditorium. Her talk title was, "Why Do Feminists Refuse to See 'Chaos' When Others Do?". Over 120 people attended the two day conference and keynote.

Cynthia Enloe spoke as the keynote for the Gender and States of Emergency conference. The goal of the conference was to gather a range of perspectives on how gender, in relation to racial, sexual, bodily and economic dimensions, is vital to investigating the impact of war, natural disasters, and political upheavals. The two day event was held at The Ohio State University and co-sponsored by The Department of Women's Studies at The Ohio State University and Mershon Center for International Security Studies.

Cynthia Enloe is a Research Professor in the Department of International Development, Community, and Environment and Women's Studies at Clark University. Her research interests include the interactions of feminism, women, militarized culture, war, politics and globalized economics in countries such as Japan, Iraq, the US, Britain, the Philippines, Canada, Chile and Turkey. In this talk in particular, she focused on what it meant for women to feel unstable in Egypt and various other countries that participated in the Arab Spring.

Audience members asked Cynthia Enloe questions during her presentation at the Blackwell Auditorium on Friday, April 22, 2011.